EVERY MEAL HAS A STORY LIKE APRIL’S

April, a mother to four boys and a caregiver to elderly in-laws and sick parents, typically has her hands full. On any given day, she is transporting children to sporting activities, taking someone to an appointment or working as a waitress. April is diligent about talking with her boys about their futures, emphasizing the importance of education and college. She believes they each have a good head on their shoulders, and hopes they strive to have a better life than her. She openly talks about having her first child at 15 and not finishing high school. “The choices we make in our lives dictate our future, and I hope my boys don’t have to struggle like I do.”

To help her food assistance benefits last the entire month, April is resourceful. “I’m really good at living below my means. By the end of the month, after all my bills are paid, I have $150 for groceries and other expenses.”

She bases her grocery list on the items she’s able to get from the local pantry, buys items in bulk and finds affordable protein at meat markets. Most recently, she began bartering to pay for sporting activities. Volunteering to be the team mom gives her a discount on registration fees; helping the coach’s wife wash dogs at their local business means football fees will be covered.

“My kids didn’t ask to be here; they didn’t ask for this life. It’s my job as a parent to succeed.”

Even though times are difficult for their family, April reminds her boys how much they have compared to others. Until circumstances change, she’ll be able to turn to the food pantry for help when she needs it.

LOCAL COLLEGE STUDENT GIVES BACK

For Bryce, volunteering is a welcomed break from his busy schedule. Apart from supporting the Foodbank’s mission, he loves working with staff and other volunteers. If you have attended any of the Akron-Canton Regional Foodbank’s events during the past five years, chances are you have seen Bryce. Whether it’s working late into the night at Operation Orange, handing out race packets to runners for Selfless Elf, or serving as a committee member for Taste of the Pro Football Hall of Fame, he is always ready to lend a helping hand.

“If waking up early on a Saturday and volunteering means a child, veteran or family is able to have a meal, then I am prepared to come in every Saturday, because life is about being there for others.”

Like many students, Bryce was first introduced to the Foodbank while completing service hours required by his high school. He enjoyed the flexible schedule and even created a game tracking his volunteer hours, seeing if he could beat his total from the previous month! Now, as a full-time student at The University of Akron with two on-campus jobs, he continues to dedicate his free time to hunger-relief.

“Due to my class schedule and multiple jobs, it’s sometimes hard to come in on a regular basis, but whether it has been a week or three months—the staff always remembers my name. I always feel welcomed!”

Bryce is one of more than 400 volunteers from The University of Akron whose work provided more than 29,800 meals to our community in 2017. Because of their dedicated, hands-on support, The University of Akron was named the Foodbank’s Organizational Volunteer Group of the Year award winner at this year’s annual volunteer celebration.

Bryce earned a mocha apron by accruing more than 100 hours of service in 2015, and continues to be a dedicated volunteer.
Canton City’s Belden Leadership School welcomes children in grades 3 – 5. Its mission is to inspire confident, creative and open-minded learners, “where all students acquire a worldview of life’s possibilities and the confidence to pursue their dreams.”

Principal Angela Seders is confident her students can reach their full potential, however, at times, there are barriers hindering their success. All of the children at Belden Leadership School qualify for free and reduced meals. Children receive breakfast and lunch while at school, and sometimes those are the only meals they will have that day.

Seders references Abraham Maslow’s Hierarchy of Needs, simply stating that if the children in her school do not have access to regular, healthy food, it is impossible for them to focus on their school work.

In a casual conversation last fall with Reverend Ed Fashbaugh, pastor of Crossroads United Methodist Church in Canton, Seders referenced her desire to have a food pantry in the school to better serve her families. Crossroads operates a pantry from the church every Friday and was eager to help. Rev. Fashbaugh engaged the Akron-Canton Regional Foodbank for support, and a few months later, the pantry was up and running. Foodbank staff helped the pantry secure a new refrigerator to store fresh produce and other perishable items with support from a child hunger grant award from Feeding America, thanks to Linda and Keith Monda.

Rev. Fashbaugh and his team of volunteers pick up food for the school pantry at the Foodbank when they pick up their food order for the church. This helps eliminate transportation costs and staff time for the school.

The school pantry is available one day per month, and opens once school is dismissed, in hopes of being convenient for parents picking up their children. It’s open to all residents, not just school families, and plans to be open during the summer months too. It currently serves approximately 20 families, but with 300 kids enrolled in the school, Seders realizes it has potential for major growth.

Seders and her teachers volunteer their time to staff the pantry. They hope to uncover the reasons more families are not accessing the pantry and are open to adjustments during this beginning learning phase.

“Any barrier we can tear down helps us in the educational realm,” she said.
Thank you for helping us exceed our goal

During Harvest for Hunger, we exceeded our meal goal and provided more than 5.3 million meals toward hunger-relief efforts in our community. We celebrate you—our partners, friends and supporters, who gave so freely and openly. Thank you for supporting Harvest for Hunger, a campaign fueled by collaboration, where pancake breakfasts, dress-down days, donations made in grocery store checkout lines, and more than 200 food & funds drives are the difference between hunger and hope for tens of thousands of community members in our region. Thank you!

Starbucks FoodShare program rescues perishable food

In partnership with Feeding America®, the Foodbank joined with local Starbucks stores as part of the Starbucks FoodShare program that donates nourishing, unsold food product that would otherwise go to landfills.

With donations from 19 local stores, this new, perishable food rescue initiative provided more than 9,400 pounds of food in 2017. The program is estimated to provide 52,000 meals annually.

“The program exemplifies what we can accomplish when we work together,” said Foodbank President & CEO Dan Flowers.

Starbucks was recently recognized as the Corporate Volunteer of the Year award winner at the Foodbank’s annual volunteer celebration. Local stores donated more than 220 hours of volunteer service in 2017, and through various food & funds drives, they collected more than 27,000 pounds of food.
